Every business has a stake in the Internet

- Regardless of sector, size or location, all businesses are affected by Internet policy developments. As users, innovators and investors of technology, business the private sector contributes insight and experience to ensure the stable functioning and sustainable growth of our digital world.
- The IGF facilitates business engagement with all Internet stakeholders—government, civil society and the technical community. Here, we can collaborate and exchange perspectives on how best to advance the development of an open, secure and stable Internet.

Achieving meaningful, universal connectivity will be a vital component of a post-COVID recovery

To enable Internet connectivity, frameworks should be based on light touch ICT policy, encourage competition and enable new players

The very nature of the global Internet necessitates an effective multistakeholder governance model to be at its core

Governments should work with business to ensure that regulation does not hamper socially beneficial uses of technology

Your participation in the IGF is essential to

- Navigate important policy developments that affect your business
- Impact how digital technologies are used and considered for sustainable development
- Exchange best practices with all stakeholders from across the globe
- Inform policymakers about business processes and systems
- Respond to questions about innovative technology or business models
- Support efforts to empower women and disadvantaged groups online
- Engage with experts and secure support for capacity building initiatives

Holistic and flexible policy frameworks are crucial to harness the full potential of digital technologies for inclusive and sustainable development

Policymakers should recognise the benefits of data flows to the global economy

Rights offline must also be protected online

Local content and cultural and linguistic diversity, are crucial for bringing access to all

Cooperation between stakeholders is essential for strengthening Internet security and privacy
